The exhibition spans through the post-modernism, cinema and new media of Duchamp and Andy Warhol.

The readymade presents itself as a autonomous artistic medium through paintings, sculpture and photography.

Andrews and Israel advance this position by insisting upon temporality and contingency as new parameters for their readymade art.

Based in Los Angeles, the exhibition presents each artist's interpretation of local film and media industry cultures.

By use of different material and individual aesthetic standpoints, both Andrews and Israel repeatedly identify objects that allude or overlap, with historic sculptural gestures.

The Kathryn Andrews and Alex Israel exhibition will be on view at the Gagosian Gallery Roma through March 15th 2014.
